SEEING DIXIE LAND FROM AUTO

EXTRACTS FROM NOTE BOOK BY D. L. BARLOW

South east of the city, but in the State of Georgia, is Chicamauga Park which embraces 5500 acres—all beautified with monuments, drive ways etc. As we drove slowly through this battlefield looking upon the scenes where so many of the soldiers gave all, and all of whom gave much, my mind was upon the past. Was it possible that such a lovely, quiet place was once the scene of one of the fiercest contests of the war. And as we crossed the graceful, winding Chicamauga whose grandeur and beauty no painter can portray, we had to exclaim with the poet, Robert Walker:

"Along thy sides wild cannon burst,
The Blue and Gray nearby have stood
Awaiting you to quench their thirst,
And give in turn red human blood—
Consigned by you to distant deep,
The bit rest memory of war,
In thy vast bosom hiding sleep
A nation's deed and noble scar!
May Lethe's waves each atom flood,
Chicamauga! Chicamauga!"

"Today your face is one grand smile,
Of prejudice there is none,
No malice holds, no foes beguile,
But greater duties to be done:
To feed the roots of growing crops,
To put the green in forest leaves,
To teach mankind where hatred stings
And raise instead Love's golden sheaves—
Flow thou forever, on and on—
Chicamauga! Chicamauga!"

Late in the evening we left these battle scenes feeling that we had spent an eventful day, and stopped over night with Mr. Puryear, of La Fayette, Georgia. Here we again met real southern hospitality—the kind that you read about.

After we had struck camp I visited a farm home to procure eggs and milk. I walked up to the house and on the porch I found an American beauty—a southern girl. I told her my business. She said, "We can furnish you milk, but as to eggs, we sold all we had today, but will have broilers go and look the nests again. They may find a few." I tried to tell her not to bother about them but it was no use. I had to have eggs even if the hens had to go back on duty. In a few moments the boys returned with tea eggs, and I had not gone far on my return to camp when I heard some one calling. A boy came running. He brought me a half gallon of fresh butter milk and he would not under persuasion take one cent for it. The next morning as I passed the house on my way toward Rome, I stopped to leave the milk jar and the southern girl was anxious to know if I found the eggs all O. K. "If not" she said, "you must have your money back."

The sun never shone upon a prettier morning than that of October 28th. It was a little cooler than we expected to find this far south, but the sky was surely clear and bright.

We soon made the run of about 45 miles to Rome, Georgia. Here we found a beautiful city of about 18,000 people. This town was chartered in 1847 and is picturesquely located at the confluence of the Etowah and Ostonaula rivers, which here unite forming the Coosa, and is the commercial center of the agricultural districts of these river valleys as well as a large peach and cotton market.

During the war of '61 to '65 the Confederates held this city until May 1864 when they had to give it up because of Gen. Sherman's march to the sea. Rome is an educational center of some note. Here we find the Berry Industrial School for county boys and girls of limited means. This school was founded by Miss Martha Berry whose splendid educational plans has been generously copied by others. Also Shorter College for young women and one of the leading institutions of the kind in the south is located here.

In Rome on a broad and well kept street I find a large and handsome shaft which is the memory of the women of the Confederacy.

Upon this monument I read the following inscription which seems to me to state the case to perfection: "She was obedient to the God she adored, and true to every vow she made to man. She was loyal to the country she loved so well and upon its altar she has laid husband, sire and son. The Rome she loved was graced with sincerity of life and devotion of heart. She reared her sons to unselfish chivalry and her daughters to spotless purity. Her children delight to give her honor and love to speak her praise."

I further read that the woman of the Confederacy was one, "Whose purity, whose fidelity, whose gentle genius in love and counsel kept the home sacred, the family a school of virtue, the state a court of honor, who made of war a season of heroism, and of peace a time of healing—the guardian of our tranquility and of our strength." Surely she was an angel of mercy.

Here we also walked through Myrtle Hill cemetery and in it we found the graves of many prominent people. Perhaps the one that attracts most attention at this time is that of Mrs. Ella Low Axon Wilson, first wife of Woodrow Wilson, now president of the United States.

Myrtle Hill also holds the dust of Mrs. Wilson's parents, Rev. S. E. Axon and wife. Mr. Axon was for seventeen years pastor of Rome Presbyterian Church, and while yet in the noon day of life was called to his reward.

Near noon we left Rome and after driving a few miles we ate dinner. After dinner while my folks rested I walked to a little rise in the road that I might see the surrounding country and while looking over the Georgia hills and valleys my mind naturally reverted to the Civil war history of our country. At one time as a teacher it was my business to read something of the causes of the war and of the battles fought on the fields over which I have walked the past few days, as well as the fields upon which I expected to walk the next few days. While here alone I want to know if the "Histories we have read gave us facts; or are we in the habit of reading into them the things we do not like? All the histories I have read were written by northern authors, but in talking with people who lived during the dark days of the war I have been inclined to question some things. Any man who hears the story of Lincoln must admire him and it is just as true of Lee, Jackson, Longstreet, Bragg, Johnson, and others. These men thought they were right, and I believe it was Jefferson Davis who said "The impartial enlightened verdict of mankind will vindicate the rectitude of our conduct and the wisdom of the hearts of men will judge the sincerity with which we have labored to preserve the government of our fathers in its spirit."

More than half a century has passed since the surrender at Appomattox and soldiers of the armies returned to their homes. One picked up his business life where he had left it four years before. The others returned to a heap of ashes which was all that was left of a once happy home, but he did not complain, but built a new home and with it a new south far better and grander than the old ever could have been. There is no malice here now, but on the other hand the southern people possess real patriotism which clings to no river bank, no mountain slope, but lifts its aspiring eye to a continent redeemed by common sacrifice and made sacred by the shedding of kindred blood.

As I look to the southeast and think of Atlanta which is some sixty miles away, there comes to my mind the name of a man who lived in that city and whose writing and orations did more to bring about our present age of national patriotism than any man living or dead. His name is Henry W. Grady and when he died in early manhood he was literally loving a nation into peace. I believe it was he who said in one of his orations, "This hour half needs the loyalty that is loyal to one section and yet holds the other in enduring suspicion and estrangement. Give us the broad and perfect loyalty that loves and trusts Georgia alike with Massachusetts. That knows no north, no south, no east, no west, but endears with equal love every foot of our soil, every section of our union."

We must go. Next stop Cartersville, noted the country over as the home of Sam Jones, one of the world's greatest and most noted evangelists. Next we came to Kennesaw which was the boyhood home of Judge Landis, of Chicago.

At Marietta we found a National cemetery which contains about 11,000 graves, 3000 of which are of unknown dead. About ten miles west of this place Gen. Sherman was defeated by Gen. Johnston. This as I remember was Sherman's only reverse in his Atlanta campaign.

Here also occurred at the hands of a mob on the morning of August 17, 1915 the hanging of Lee M. Frank. When in the stationery business in the city of Huntington, W. Va., we had some dealings with Mr. Frank's company and I remember I was much interested in reading of the crime with which he was charged and his trial as well as the account of his hanging.

Lower Farm Implement Prices

The break has come. For some time prices paid for your farm products have been low. It is but natural for you to want lower prices on the farm implements used in producing your crops.

Announcement is made by the Oliver Chilled Plow Works of a general price reduction in their lines that brings prices to the basis of 1918. They are the first to make this reduction and are taking the loss which the move brings, for there has been little reduction in labor or material, as their contribution in hastening a return to normal conditions.

This is your opportunity to secure new, up-to-date Oliver Quality implements that will help you produce a full crop, and get them at a price in line with the reduced prices on your farm products.

DURBIN

Charleston.—Plans to introduce Libbey-Owens sheet glass machines in Europe was announced at a meeting of the stockholders of the company in Toledo. The first plant, which will be located in Belgium, will be a duplicate of the first Libbey-Owens plant in Charleston. It was announced, the plant to be of 12 machine capacity. This insures competition on European soil with hand and cylinder methods of the old world, it was said. When the first plant is in operation in Europe, Libbey-Owens machines will be manufacturing glass not only in Charleston but in Japan, Canada and Torrance, Cal.

Clarksburg.—To find homes for girls now in the Industrial Home for Girls at Industrial, Harrison county, and to follow them up after they leave the state home so that they will not be come the prey of designing men, is the purpose of the Woman's Club of Clarksburg, especially since a recent address made to the club by J. Walter Barnes, treasurer of the state board of control. Mr. Barnes urged the members of the club to co-operate in every way with Miss Jennie Sutton, the superintendent of the school. Miss Sutton reports that the average duty number of girls in the home during 1920 is 99 and that the per capita cost of maintaining these girls is $2.40.

Charleston.—The grand total cash balance, all funds, at end of December in the state treasury amounted to $1,290,980.55, according to the monthly report of State Treasurer W. S. Johnson. The amount of the school fund invested was $980,160; of the workmen's compensation fund invested, $5,596,500. The grand total balance, including investments was $10,855,380.56. In the state fund, general revenue, the cash at the beginning of the month was $194,306.70; overdrawing; cash receipts during month were $518,670.11; total, $323,763.41; cash disbursements during month, $375,205.96; cash balance at end of month, $51,441.95 overdrawing.

Charleston.—Last year 47 West Virginia farmers entered a farm egg-laying contest. They were not the owners of "sure-enough" poultry farms, but just the owners of average farms where general farming is the rule. These farmers "demonstrated" to all poultry flock owners that there is money in raising chickens under the usual conditions and reasonable care. As interest on investment and returns for labor, these farms received $18,000 during the year, after paying for feed. When it is considered that these farms did not average 100 hens, the size of these returns becomes more impressive. Many general farms in the Mountain State do not make a cash return each year as large as did the poultry flocks alone.

The Hawaiian Quartette which was to have appeared in the High School, on Tuesday evening, Jan. 25, is planning to fill their engagement within a short time. Due to a cave-in on the main line of the C. & O. Railroad, the troupe was unable to reach Ronocovette in time to make connections with the Marlinton train, hence they were not able to fill their engagement here on Tuesday evening. The manager assured us that they would return this way and give us our entertainment soon. When the date of their return is definitely known, it will be advertised.

The second quarterly conference of the Frost charge will convene at Cloverlick February 6, services beginning at 7:30 p. m. Dr. L. E. Ressegger will have charge of the service. There will also be service at Poage Lane at 11 a. m. and at Stony Bottom at 3 p. m. by the pastor, Rev. C. B. Rutledge.
